Greetings from the Director

Welcome

This is a moment to celebrate the creative accomplishments of the class of 2018.

Our graduating seniors have successfully navigated their way through the various curriculums in our nine degree granting programs. The works in this exhibition display a broad range of practices by artists, designers, educators and historians, which illustrate new and established technologies in material and virtual realms. This exhibition demonstrates the School's commitment to excellence and innovation in the practice, study, and teaching of the arts and confirms the advantages of professional studio programs taught in conjunction with the interdisciplinary resources of a research one university. This exhibition confirms that the students and faculty in the School of Art + Design are committed to elevating and sustaining the arts as both a distinct and necessary approach to understanding, as well as a vibrant expression of diverse human experiences.

We celebrate our 2018 graduates and the development of their intellectual and artistic goals as they embark on their careers in the arts.

Designers' Statement

As graduation approaches and we prepare to depart from the College of Fine and Applied arts, the BFA exhibition serves as an opportune moment to observe and reflect on the works and memories we have created and the growth we have each individually experienced during our time here. Our respective programs at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign have allowed us to explore various forms of artistry, refine skills and techniques we proudly hold today, but more importantly allowed us to work amongst the talented and creative minds that form the Class of 2018.

As we took on the role of designing the identity of the 2018 BFA Exhibition and Catalog we desired to represent the culmination of the hard work each student has put into finding their distinct identity as creators of art and design while attending the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Inspired by our community and student body we sought to highlight how being within the School of Art + Design has created an interdisciplinary environment in which we have been able to form our identities through not only our purposeful and self-driven work but also through the process of learning, iterating, and sharing of knowledge amongst peers as we collectively grew within this creative environment. Our goal was to visualize this moment of pause as we observe the culmination of our growth together and prepare to move forward in our own respective directions.

The work showcased in this catalog is a representation of the talent and skills we have been able to cultivate during our time spent here. We invite those who view this catalog to experience the process and culmination of skills that these students have acquired as we now gather collectively to represent the School of Art + Design at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

Art History

Krannert Art Museum is an invaluable resource for students in the School of Art and Design at the University of Illinois, and particularly for those in art history. Majors in art history work extensively with the museum's collections and participate in its many events and activities. They sometimes serve as interns at the museum or consult with its curators and staff. Numerous graduates from the School of Art and Design have gone on to work professionally at museums. For this year's BFA catalogue, seniors in art history chose to write short essays about objects from the Krannert's collection as a tribute to the importance of the museum in their education.

Lingjun Jiang

Kyōga-en (狂画苑), literally “garden of the crazy drawings,” was a typical title for books of humorous illustrations and caricatures in Edo-period Japan (1615–1868), especially in the latter half of the Edo period. There were many different types of illustrated books entitled Kyōga-en. They played a central role in popular culture and the burgeoning consumer society that developed in the Edo region (present-day Tokyo) over the course of the nineteenth century.

This illustrated book from the collection of Krannert Art Museum is by Maki Bokusen (牧,墨遷; also named Gekkōtei Bokusen 月光亭墨遷). It was first published around 1815, and was still reprinted and redistributed in the late Edo period, even after Bokusen passed away. It was in all likelihood a popular publication. This copy was published posthumously in the late 19th century, as is indicated by advertisements inside the book for other publications produced at the time.

Bokusen was a student of the famous artist Katsushika Hokusai (葛飾北). In addition to his Ukiyo-e colored woodblock prints, Hokusai was also known for his many entertaining caricatures. His illustrated book series Hokusai Manga 北斎漫画 was a longtime best-seller in the Edo period. Advertisements for Hokusai Manga and other works by Hokusai are included in this illustrated book.

Kyōga-en Shohen contains fifty pages of colored illustrations, a three-page preface by Bokusen, and a colophon indicating the printer and place of publication. Bokusen’s works are in the style of Hokusai, and his caricatures are indeed humorous, depicting people engaged in various activities. Some illustrations poke fun at aristocratic women and men, mythical creatures, and even the Seven Lucky Gods from Japanese folklore.

Anna Ruysch's Still Life of Flowers in a Glass Vase (1690) was acquired by the Krannert Art Museum in 2017. Ruysch was a formally trained painter who produced many floral still-life paintings. She came from an elite family in Amsterdam with artistic and scientific interests: her father was a renowned professor of anatomy and botany, and her mother came from a family of artists.

Still Life of Flowers in a Glass Vase depicts sixteen different species of plants and insects that are arranged to create the illusion of a flourishing bouquet. Many of the flowers were not in bloom during the same season or in the same region. Thus, Ruysch must have combined studies made at different moments from real specimens and the drawings of other artists into the final canvas. Her scientific accuracy was much appreciated by connoisseurs of both flowers and art.

Dutch still-life painting often featured natural specimens and luxury goods acquired from all over the globe, inviting contemplation on the beauty of nature and the power of man. Ruysch's painting includes four tulips, three of which are striped, a rare and highly valued attribute. Tulips were a prized commodity in northern Europe and were seen as representative of nature's artistry. Dutch still-life painters such as Ruysch showcased their artistic skills by creating seemingly factual descriptions, when in actuality they produced persuasive fictions that delighted and awed viewers.

Abraham van Beyeren's Still Life is a pronkstilleven (luxury still life), a type of painting that was popular in the Dutch Republic during the second half of the seventeenth century. The painting represents a sumptuous display of food, flowers, and tableware. Van Beyeren's painting displays his virtuoso ability to render various surfaces and textures, such as those of the delicate petals, the wrinkled tablecloth, the shiny metal vessels, and the succulent fruits. In particular, the peeled lemon and sliced cantaloupe suggest van Beyeren's sophisticated treatment of both surface and volume. The silver ewer reveals his interest in reflexy-const, or the study of light and its reflection from different surfaces. In the reflection on the ewer Van Beyeren has included an image of himself in front of an easel, suggesting that he is truthfully depicting everything he sees. The self-portrait can also be understood as a signature, declaring the artist's authorship.

In addition to its celebration of abundant material goods, the painting may also convey a moral lesson. As a leader in international trade, the Dutch Republic was a wealthy nation filled with foreign commodities, some of which are present in the painting. For example, the blue and white porcelain bowl would have been imported from China and regarded as an exotic rarity. However, as members of a Calvinist society that promoted simplicity and austerity, Dutch artists often warned viewers not to overindulge in luxury. Thus, van Beyeren includes vanitas symbols that warn of the dangers of a worldly life. In the foreground, an open watch next to the flower suggests the elapsing of time and imminence of death. The contrast between the blooming flower to the left and the withered spray to the right can also be interpreted as a sign of transience.

Studying the Visual Arts

The School of Art + Design is committed to developing the next generation of leading artists, designers, scholars, and educators. Our graduates are specialists in creativity and visual communication, and our curricula develop entrepreneurial and problem-solving skills that are increasingly valued across multiple domains. An undergraduate degree from the School of Art + Design can be the pathway to becoming a practicing artist/designer, educator, and scholar. Or it could lead to further study towards an advanced degree.

Students in our school learn from and exchange ideas with accomplished practitioners on a daily basis. In most classes, students work closely with a faculty member to develop their aesthetic vision, build technical skills, and expand their critical thinking. Our faculty and staff offer a wide range of expertise, backgrounds and interests, and are eager to work with students to construct individualized cross-disciplinary experiences for them. The faculty are active professional artists, designers and scholars who routinely achieve national and international recognition. Our yearly Visitors Series gives students exposure to leading contemporary artists, designers, educators, and scholars.

The School of Art + Design is accredited by the National Association of Schools of Art and Design (NASAD) and is regarded as one of the outstanding public university art programs in the United States.

Majors

The School offers the BFA degree with majors in the following areas:

- Art Education
- Art History - BA degree is also offered
- Crafts - Metal
- Graphic Design
- Industrial Design
- New Media
- Painting
- Photography
- Sculpture

The School offers a variety of Minors to complement other degree programs:

Art + Design Minor

Integrate creative art and design practices with your other academic or research pursuits, and develop transferable skills.

Art History Minor

Complement your major area of study with an art-historical education that will enhance your understanding of the diverse visual cultures that inform today's world. A range of introductory courses form the basis for more advanced work in seminars and lecture classes.

Community-Based Art Education Minor

Work in the visual arts in a variety of locations including cultural centers, museums, hospitals, nursing homes, adult day care centers, schools, and recreation centers.

Facilities

The School of Art + Design provides a work environment conducive to developing your own creative direction. Students work in dedicated studio spaces and have access to our extensive laboratory, workshop, and exhibition resources. The equipment housed in our labs ranges from cutting edge 2D and 3D design and fabrication software and hardware to traditional woodworking and film photography tools.

Our computer labs offer students a wide range of hardware, including over 100 Mac and Windows computers, and multiple printing options, including a solvent-based inkjet printer and cutter, and state of the art large format photo-quality inkjet printers. Software available includes industry standard applications for video, sound design, page layout, photo manipulation, 3D modeling and rendering, and animation. Our digital output lab is equipped with multiple 3D printing technologies, 3D scanners, a laser cutter, and computer controlled embroidery.

The school also maintains laboratories equipped with a comprehensive selection of hand and power tools for manipulation of traditional three-dimensional materials, in addition to computer controlled routers. The ink lab houses an entire floor of traditional printmaking equipment, and our darkrooms provide access to silver-based photographic processes. In addition, we maintain extensive work areas for the ceramics and metals disciplines. Our shooting studios provide a professional photography and video recording environment. Of special note is our checkout window, which provides Art + Design students the opportunity to take advantage of our wide selection of portable equipment. Items available to students at the window include: point-and-shoot and professional digital SLR cameras; digital video cameras; audio recording equipment; film and print processing tools; digital projection and presentation equipment; computers and peripherals; medium and large format film cameras; and continuous and strobe lighting equipment.

Community

The School of Art + Design has approximately 540 undergraduates and 70 graduate students. The School is situated within the College of Fine and Applied Arts and benefits from proximity to six academic neighbors within the College: the School of Architecture, School of Music, Departments of Dance, Theatre, Landscape Architecture, and Urban and Regional Planning.

The University of Illinois provides an atmosphere well suited for developing a professional career in the arts. As a major research university, Illinois provides a full range of progressive cultural and intellectual opportunities and encourages interdisciplinary work among its faculty and students.

Institutional resources contributing to this conducive environment include the Krannert Art Museum, the Krannert Center for Performing Arts, Japan House, the University of Illinois Library (the largest public university collection in the nation), the Beckman Institute for Advanced Science, and Technology, Siebel Center for Computer Science and the National Center for Supercomputing Applications (site of some of the most sophisticated technological research in the world).

Visitors

The School of Art + Design Visitors Series is designed to give students access to a network of artists designers and scholars of regional, national and international reputation.
